SWIMMING sensation Justin Daniel Junio is cheered by spectators after completing his record swim (see map below) across the Mactan Channel.

5-year-old boy conquers Mactan Channel

By Jaime R. Bulambot
Inquirer Visayas

CEBU CITY—HE LOOKED JUST like any other 5-year-old boy, until Justin Daniel Junio jumped into the water yesterday and set a record for swimming across the Mactan Channel.

Junio achieved what many grown-ups could not.

[illegible]

They were not disappointed as they witnessed the youngest person to ever cross the channel.

"We are very happy that he made it. Ever since, we were confident that he would make it because he loves the water so much and it was his desire to cross the channel," retired Air Force Col. Florencio Junio said [illegible]

Experts call for mosquito eradication to fight dengue

By Blanche S. Rivera

SINGAPORE—INCREASED POPULATION density in developing countries and the mobility of people in the developed world have led health research experts here to call for a back-to-basics mosquito-eradication program in countries affected by dengue, including the Philippines.

The Novartis Institute for Tropical Diseases (NITD), a public-private venture of pharmaceutical giant Novartis and the Singapore Economic Development Board, said governments should note the alarming statistics on the reemergence of the mosquito-borne disease.

There are some 50 million cases of dengue, dengue hemorrhagic fever (DHF) and dengue shock syndrome every year, most of them in Southeast Asia and the Western Pacific, according to the World Health Organization. This leads to around 500,000 hospitalizations per year and an estimated 12,000 deaths.

"Dengue is diabolic. They [infected people] just bleed inside and outside. It's like ebola," NITD chief Paul Herrling said at a press briefing.

Some 2.5 billion people are at risk for dengue and DHF. The Philippines' Department of Health has reported nearly 15,000 dengue cases this year alone. In Singapore, dengue infections skyrocketed from 4,000 four years ago to 14,000 last year.

"It looks like, currently we are on a very clear trend of an increase... This increase probably has to do with mobility and the density of the population. Of course it could also be other things, maybe the virus has evolved. We don't know. That's what we have to find out," Herrling said.

He said the exponential increase in the number of dengue cases has baffled health experts and scientists, who have started taking a closer look at dengue and its possible recurrence.

The NITD, whose research is focused on dengue and tuberculosis, is doing genome-focused studies to find out why some people infected with dengue die while others manage to overcome it, and how this could be addressed.

Dengue is a mosquito-borne viral infection (genus Flavivirus) that causes fever, severe joint pain that could lead to shock, hemorrhage and, in the worst cases, death. DHF has a fatality rate that can exceed 20 percent, especially among children.

DHF was first recognized as potentially fatal during World War II when epidemics among soldiers were reported in the Philippines and Thailand. Since the war, dengue epidemics reemerged about ten years ago, Herrling said.

"Dengue was important during the war, but then the mosquitoes got killed by DDT (dichlorodiphenyltrichloroethane). Dengue disappeared. Now people don't use DDT anymore so the mosquitoes are back. Dengue is back and the number of people with dengue is growing exponentially," he said.

The NITD chief is pushing for a renewed drive against mosquitoes, especially in tropical countries which are at high risk for dengue and its accompanying economic burden.

"What governments can do now is mosquito control. Reduce the population of mosquitoes, kill the larvae. Education is important, especially in endemic countries like the Philippines where there are many children," Herrling said.

He said NITD has been working on an antiviral drug for dengue for the last three years, but at this stage, it could take another 10 to 12 years.

"We have already selected some enzymes. We have the very first drug this year that could go into the development stage," Herrling said, adding that NITD was also testing some natural compounds against the virus.

Gov't woos US firm on $1-B expansion

IN THIS ISSUE

High power cost a major drawback

By Ronnel W. Domingo

AMERICAN SEMICONDUCTOR GIANT TEXAS Instruments, one of the country's top exporters, is considering a $1-billion investment in an additional factory and the government's investment promotion agencies are scrambling to beat China and convince the firm to locate here.

Armand C. Arreza, chief executive of the Subic Bay Metropolitan Authority, said the semiconductor firm needed 20 to 30 hectares for a "third phase" of its facility in the Baguio City economic zone.

"They expect to make a decision within the year," Arreza said. "The Board of Investments, the Philippine Economic Zone Authority and Clark Development Corp. are helping court TI."

"TI has no more room to expand in the Baguio ecozone," the SBMA administrator added. "A technical team from TI is expected to visit Subic this week."

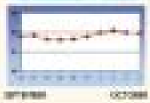

Arreza said TI intended to build a redundant plant for back-up purposes considering that its output in Baguio represented two-fifths of the American firm's global sales.

He said the company was mainly concerned about electricity costs, for which it was spending some $1 million or about P50 million a month.

Arreza said TI's concern would be addressed when Velasco Cogeneration Corp.'s planned 300-

Mama Lea goes back to work

Ms. Salonga assumes the toughest role of her stellar career yet—as multi-tasker, juggling the duties of mom and singing star

LEA and Rob at baby Nic's baptism: "Parenting is a grounding, humbling experience."

By Bayani San Diego Jr.

AS A STYLIST FIXES the hair of Lea Salonga, the stage and screen star is blow-drying baby Nicole Beverly's wet points in her dressing room at the Cultural Center of the Philippines (CCP).

Within reach, grandmother Ligaya Salonga is lulling the five-month-old baby to sleep on the sofa.

The above scene pretty well sums up the state of Lea's life right now.

Lea, who has just arrived from a doctor's appointment, is at the CCP to launch her "comeback concert of sorts," "The Journey: A Concert for the Future," set on Oct. 20 and 21 at the Main Theater.

Officially, the concert marks the new mom's return to show biz.

With husband Rob Chien, she has just come home from the US, where they showed off baby Nic here to their relatives. She explains that she has yet to recover from jet lag, "equalize her brain" and study her repertoire.

She is also preparing for a new CD with recording label Sony-BMG.

Talk about a multi-tasking mom.

These days, she would gladly give Broadway showstoppers a rest in favor of lullabies which she sings to help baby Nic doze off.

"Usually, I just hum some made-up melody that I'd forget after two seconds ... or 'Rainbow Connection,'" she tells the press gathered at the launch.

Embracing motherhood is a whole different meaning, she tells Inquirer Entertainment in an exclusive in-
